

Professional services firm introduces agile and user-friendly ERP

Finnish building technology company, Amplit, is accelerating its business digitalization and growth with Unit4 ERP.

Amplit, a family-owned company specializing in building technology, is adopting Unit4 ERP for project management, procurement, and financial management.

Elisabeth Le, Development and Communications Manager at Amplit, states that in an industry struggling with a labor shortage, agile and user-friendly systems are a key advantage in recruitment.

“We were particularly impressed with the user-friendliness of Unit4’s cloud-based ERP. In an industry with fierce competition for professionals, technology should not become a bottleneck; instead, our systems should put our employees first. Our professionals want to take care of buildings, not IT systems,”

In the field of building technology, digitalization has been progressing relatively slowly, despite the potential to operate and manage many aspects remotely. Amplit is making a digital leap forward, in part, driven by customer expectations as more of them request electronic transactions and comprehensive reporting.

“As a family business, we are known for being agile and flexible, and we want to maintain this reputation. Simultaneously, we must possess reporting and procurement capabilities that match or exceed those of the industry’s largest players. By investing in a new system, we also aim to make the quality of our work more visible to our customers and increase customer satisfaction,” says Le.

“We were particularly impressed with the user-friendliness of Unit4’s cloud-based ERP.”
